

Interesting Article

Written by Jack Brown

Wednesday, 18 July 2012 20:24 - Last Updated Saturday, 25 August 2012 20:46

---

Taking their child's sport experience too seriously, and not mixing in the appropriate levels of fun and recreation.

- Living vicariously – as though they were taking part themselves – through their child's sport experiences.

- Having an unrealistically overblown assessment of their child's talent.

- Failing to realise when their child is developing their skills rather than being competitive.

- Not realising that their child can learn valuable sport and life lessons even when they lose.

-